COMPLAINT

Case: 1:08cv00012
Assigned To : Benson, Dee
Assign. Date : 2/6/2008
Description: Securities and Exchange
Commission v. Vescor Capital et al

Judge

Plaintiff, Securities and Exchange Commission (the "Commission"), for its Complaint against Defendants alleges as follows:

INTRODUCTION

1. This matter involves the fraudulent offer and sale of unregistered securities by Val E. Southwick ("Southwick") through several companies (collectively referred to as the "VesCor Companies"). The offering took place primarily through the sale of unregistered notes claiming to pay returns of between 8% and 24% per year, ostensibly to finance several real estate developments.

2. The VesCor Companies were headquartered in Ogden, Utah and offered and sold securities directly to investors, as well as through registered representatives associated with a now-defunct registered broker-dealer.
3. In total, Southwick formed and/or utilized approximately 150 corporations and limited liability companies (collectively referred to as “VesCor,” or the “VesCor enterprise”) to raise money from investors and develop and manage real estate projects. The money raised from investors were often used to repay earlier VesCor investors, pay Southwick’s and his family’s living expenses and fund expenses associated with any of the real estate developments and operations of the VesCor enterprise.
4. Southwick and the VesCor Companies have raised at least $180 million through the fraudulent sales of securities to investors primarily located in the western United States, including many Utah residents.
5. Southwick told investors that he was planning to develop large real estate projects and that their investments would be secured by interests in those projects. Southwick represented that VesCor’s real estate developments were profitable and assured prospective investors that each project’s encumbrances would be limited to protect investors’ secured interests.
6. Instead, Southwick operated a massive Ponzi scheme, paying existing noteholders with funds from new investors. Payments to almost all VesCor noteholders stopped in or about May 2006.
7. Virtually all of the VesCor real estate developments were unprofitable.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

8. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction by authority of Sections 20 and 22 of the Securities Act of 1933 (the “Securities Act”) [15 U.S.C. §§ 77t and 77v] and Sections 21 and Section 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the “Exchange Act”) [15 U.S.C. §§ 78u and 78aa].

9. Defendants, directly and indirectly, singly and in concert, have made use of the means and instrumentalities of interstate commerce and the mails in connection with the transactions, acts and courses of business alleged herein, certain of which have occurred within the District of Utah.
 10. Venue for this action is proper in the District of Utah under Section 22(a) of the Securities Act [15 U.S.C. § 77v(a)] and under Section 27 of the Exchange Act [15 U.S.C. § 78aa] because certain of the transactions, acts, practices, and courses of business alleged in this Complaint took place in this district and because certain of the defendants reside in and transact business in this district.
 11. Defendants, unless restrained and enjoined by this Court, will continue to engage in the transactions, acts, practices, and course of business alleged herein and in transactions, acts, practices, and courses of business of similar purport and object.
 12. Defendants' conduct took place in connection with the offer, purchase and/or sale of securities, primarily in the form of Promissory Notes.

DEFENDANTS

13. VesCor Capital Corporation ("VCC"), headquartered in Ogden, Utah, is a Nevada corporation formed by Southwick in 1990. VCC was one of the main entities Southwick used to carry out his scheme. Although prohibited from the fraudulent sale of unregistered securities in Utah by the Utah Division of Securities in 2002, Southwick and VCC continued to sell unregistered securities and continued to make misrepresentations to investors during and after 2002. In 2004, Southwick and VCC entered into a second agreement prepared. Southwick and VCC did not fulfill the terms of the second agreement.

14. VesCor Capital, Inc. ("VCI"), headquartered in Ogden, Utah, is a Nevada corporation formed by Southwick in 1995. VCI was one of the primary issuers of the unregistered promissory notes. VCI filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, District of Utah on May 30, 2007.
15. Vescorp Capital, LLC ("Vescorp"), headquartered in Ogden, Utah, is a Nevada limited liability company formed by Southwick in 2003. Vescorp purported to issue promissory notes pursuant to Rule 506 of Regulation D (17 C.F.R. § 230.506).
16. VesCorp Capital IV-A, LLC, ("VesCorp IV-A") headquartered in Ogden, Utah, is a Nevada limited liability company formed by Southwick in 2004. Vescorp Capital IV-A purported to issue promissory notes pursuant to Rule 506 of Regulation D (17 C.F.R. § 230.506).
17. VesCorp Capital IV-M, LLC, ("VesCorp IV-M") headquartered in Ogden, Utah, is a Nevada limited liability company formed by Southwick in 2004. Vescorp Capital IV-A purported to issue promissory notes pursuant to Rule 506 of Regulation D (17 C.F.R. § 230.506).
18. Val E. Southwick ("Southwick") is a resident of Ogden, Utah. Southwick founded, controlled and is responsible for the operations, activities, accounts and uses of funds of the VesCor enterprise.

BACKGROUND

19. Southwick and the Vescor Companies have sold at least $180 million in unregistered notes to over 800 investors since approximately 1990. Southwick, the VesCor Companies and the VesCor enterprise were purportedly in the business of real estate development.

20. VCC, VCI, Vescorp, VesCorp IV-A and VesCorp IV-M were the primary entities that Southwick used to issue securities in the form of promissory notes.
21. Throughout the past 17 years, Southwick's operations have involved a practice whereby Southwick caused the VesCor Companies to issue promissory notes and other securities to finance several real estate projects he developed and proposed to develop. However, rather than using investor funds to develop specific real estate projects as represented, Southwick often used investor funds to meet various obligations, including applying a significant amount of money to pay VesCor Companies' promised returns to earlier investors.
22. While Southwick was carrying out the fraudulent scheme, the VesCor Companies' obligations to noteholders grew considerably, while the real estate projects of the VesCor enterprise proved unprofitable. During the scheme, Southwick kept the VesCor enterprise viable by convincing many noteholders to roll over their investments in the VesCor Companies and by initiating new real estate projects for which Southwick raised funds that were then used to finance his current obligations to other investors and pay for the ongoing expenses of the VesCor enterprise.
23. Through the VesCor enterprise, Southwick developed, or initiated the development of, several real estate projects in the western states including office buildings, a storage facility, apartment complexes, condominium projects, and a planned luxury hotel and industrial park.
24. The locations of these projects include California, Montana, Nevada and Utah.
25. Southwick's sales pitch to prospective investors in all of the VesCor projects was that he was seeking funding to develop a specific piece of property, or several real estate projects, through the issuance of notes to investors. In general, Southwick stated that the funds raised by the issuer of the VesCor notes or other securities would be loaned to a developer, which was often a VesCor-related entity. In return, investors generally received a promissory note of a stated term and interest rate, and a purported secured interest in the related property.

26. For each of the developments, Southwick formed a complex network of companies to perform various functions or provide services to the projects. For example, in VesCor's last purported development, a planned industrial park near Las Vegas, Southwick created and/or utilized dozens of companies to perform functions of land acquisition, property and investment holdings, financing entities, and a variety of other activities.
27. Investments related to the Las Vegas industrial park project were sold from at least 2004 through 2006.
28. The industrial park was never developed beyond the legal subdivision of the land and raising of investor funds.
29. Some investors in VesCor projects received recorded secured interests, such as trust deeds, while other investors were told they would receive such interests but never did. Other investors were actually given documents that appeared to represent secured interests, but the interests were never recorded.

RECRUITING INVESTORS

30. The VesCor securities were offered to investors in various ways. The Vescor Companies and Southwick offered and sold the promissory notes and other securities through the means and instrumentalities of interstate commerce.
31. Southwick solicited many investors directly.
32. Other investors were solicited by their friends or family members, many of whom had also invested in VesCor.

33. Southwick retained and supervised the activities of the unlicensed sales representatives in several states who were paid commissions on the sale of notes and other securities by the VesCor Companies. The role and function of the unlicensed salespersons was to solicit investors to purchase the notes, and Southwick was often involved in those solicitations through communicating with potential purchasers, making presentations to them and sometimes closing the sales.

VESCOR'S SALE OF PROMISSORY NOTES

34. The primary instrument used by VesCor to raise investor funds was promissory notes. Those notes generally had terms of 24-60 months with stated interest rates of between 8% and 24% a year. Investors in the notes were given the option of taking monthly interest payments on the notes or accruing the interest until the notes expired and receiving a lump sum payment.
35. Investors who chose to accrue their monthly interest payments received a higher stated interest rate on their notes than those who opted for monthly payments.
36. As Vescor funds became limited, investors were encouraged to roll over their investments in VesCor when the term of their notes expired in exchange for promises of higher interest rates or other incentives.
37. Many noteholders were told they would be provided a secured interest in the underlying real property, usually in the form of a trust deed. Some investors did receive recorded, perfected claims on properties, others were promised such secured claims but failed to receive them, and others were given claims that were represented to be secured and perfected but in fact were not.
38. At least five VesCor Companies issued notes to investors. Four of those companies filed notices of exemptions with the Commission, provided Private Placement Memoranda to investors with respect to at least some of the notes issued by those companies. The fifth entity did not make a Form D filing with the Commission.

39. The promissory notes sold by the Vescor Companies and Southwick were offered to investors with the promise that the investors would profit from their investment in the promissory notes. Investors believed that their returns would be generated by profits from the real estate developments.
40. The promissory notes were offered and sold to a broad segment of the public; while over 800 individuals invested, far more prospective investors were contacted.
41. Vescor records reflect that at least $180 million was invested by individual investors.
42. A number of the investors were elderly, unsophisticated investors who invested retirement savings and/or borrowed against their homes to invest in VesCor notes.
43. The vast majority of investors have not received interest payments since May 2006. Consequently, many of the elderly investors have encountered serious financial difficulties as a result.
44. None of the securities offered and sold by Southwick and the VesCor Companies were registered with the Commission, and no exemption from registration was available.

MISREPRESENTATIONS TO INVESTORS

45. Southwick, his agents and the VesCor Companies made a number of representations to investors in order to induce them to invest. These representations included:
 - A. Investors were told that their money would be used to fund either a specific real estate project or a group of projects.

- B. Investors were told that VesCor and/or certain VesCor-related companies were highly successful companies that had been actively developing, leasing or selling several real estate properties for several years or decades and that the properties VesCor had developed were very profitable and generated significant cash flow.
- C. Documents related to the real estate projects provided investors specific information about each project, including its purported valuation and plans related to the management, leasing or ultimate disposition of the property.
- D. Investors were told that the properties VesCor had developed were purchased at a lower valuation, had been improved by VesCor and were sold at higher values, generating profits on the investment.
- E. Many investors were told the risk to their investment was nonexistent or extremely limited because their investments were protected and secured by a real property interest, often a trust deed in first position on the underlying property, and that investors would not take junior lien positions.
- F. Other investors were told their investments were collateralized by an asset that significantly exceeded the amount of the investment, including a certificate of deposit, money market account or similar asset owned by a VesCor-related company.
- G. Investors often were told their investments were safe because investor money would be loaned on the property being financed at a loan-to-value ratio of only 60% to 70% of the stated value of the property, thereby maintaining sufficient equity in the project to cover the secured position of the investors.

H. Some investors were told their principal would be collateralized by the assets of the Vescor Companies. Investors were told that the collateral would be valued at over 200% of the investment amount.

46. These representations were false and misleading. For example, rather than using investor money to develop specific real estate projects, Southwick often used investor money as he pleased, such as making payments to other investors, meeting the expenses of any of the VesCor entities whether or not it was related to the investment project at hand, and for his personal use.
47. During the final days of VesCor's operations, no real estate development was taking place; however, Southwick continued to solicit investor money under that guise.
48. Southwick's representations regarding the security of the VesCor investments were also false. Certain investors were told their investments would be secured by recorded trust deeds, other investors were told their investments would be collateralized by VesCor assets, and some investors were told that VesCor developments all had ample equity to cover investors' funds. In fact, trust deeds, if issued at all, were often not recorded or were later released from recordation, unbeknownst to the investors. In many instances, the collateral touted by Southwick as security against investor funds did not exist. Finally, the real estate developments were all encumbered well in excess of their values and had no equity to cover investor funds.
49. Southwick also told investors VesCor was a successful enterprise, that his real estate projects were highly profitable and provided more than enough cash flow to meet company obligations. In fact, virtually all the real estate projects were unprofitable and failed to provide sufficient cash flow to meet expenses and obligations to investors. Moreover, the VesCor enterprise was insolvent

- as early as 2003; however, Southwick continued to solicit investments under the claim that VesCor was a highly successful business until September 2006.
50. Southwick also failed to provide material information to investors. He failed to disclose the actual use to which invested funds would be put and the precarious financial condition his companies were in at the time of his solicitations. He also failed to disclose to investors the Consent Order issued by the Utah Division of Securities in 2002 and an agreement he entered into with the Utah Division of Securities in 2004.
51. Southwick knew, or was reckless in not knowing, that the representations were false and misleading. He was in control of all of the VesCor operations and activities and knew the representations that were made to investors. In fact, he made many, if not all, of the misrepresentations in personal solicitations to investors.
52. Southwick knew, or was reckless in not knowing, that the Vescor operations and its real estate developments were not profitable and that investor funds were being used to pay returns to earlier investors.
53. The last known VesCor investment was made well after Southwick had ceased developing real estate or making payments to investors. In August 2006, an investor contacted Southwick based on the recommendation of friends who had previously invested with VesCor. Rather than informing this investor that VesCor had ceased to develop property and was not able to repay investors, Southwick stated that VesCor was still raising funds to develop an industrial park near Las Vegas and that the investor's investment would be used to purchase, improve and sell real property related to the industrial park.
54. This investor told Southwick he intended to invest his entire pension in VesCor and that the most important factor in the investor's decision to invest was the safety of his principal. Southwick told the investor that the investment was “absolutely safe.”

55. Southwick further told the investor that VesCor was doing well and had been in business for over 30 years.
56. Southwick also stated that the investment would be collateralized by assets of the company and that the investor’s principal would be returned in the event of a “fire sale.” Southwick also stated the investor’s name would be listed on the title to the property.
57. The investor placed his entire pension of more than $300,000 with Southwick in September 2006. The investor’s money was not used to purchase real estate, and the investor never received title to any land. Instead, Southwick simply misappropriated the funds to meet his and VesCor’s obligations.
58. The misrepresentations and omissions made by Southwick and the Vescor Companies were material.
